As many changes in the weather as a person could wish for and several that were not welcome, were furnished today. People woke to find the ground covered with snow. A little later the sun came out. Then the snow began to sift down gently. Later a heavy snowstorm developed. And in playful glee the wind sprang up and turned things into a real March blizzard. Finally the sun again smiled through the clouds of swirling snow.

The Daylight Store

"He That Spends Without Regard Shall Want Without Pity."

This bit of verbal philosophy was current long before the introduction of modern merchandising methods. It is true, though, and just as true today as ever it was. The only difference is that it's easier to heed the warning—easier for the citizens of most American towns, and especially easy for the people of Barre, in view of the splendid opportunities of profitably spending constantly presented by the Daylight Store. Here are a few of the chances for the coming week.
